Another World

By Hugh F. McKean, '30

"When I am in Crummer Hall, it is like being in another world."

This remark was made to a member of our faculty by a student in one of the graduate programs. It was passed on to me a few days ago.

Crummer Hall is in the Spanish-Colonial tradition adopted for the College by Hamilton Holt. It has the beams, the woodwork, the arches and decorative lights of the Spanish tradition.

The visitor enters a lobby furnished with many handsome pieces of furniture, all handcarved and some of them quite old. The floors are vinyl tile suggestive of travertine stone. Across the east wall are three handsome stained glass windows made originally for a great mansion in New Castle, Pennsylvania, built by the United States Steel Company for its first president. A painting in the school of Rubens (a gift of the John C. Myers family of Ashland, Ohio) and several other paintings hang on the walls, and there are several antique oriental rugs on the floor.

The stained glass windows are of particular interest. They are classical in design but the central panel of each, with the exception of the right hand window, which was damaged in shipping, is a piece of Tiffany Favrite glass. This glass was made by covering a table with fragments of green glass and covering them with a lighter green glass. They look something like a kaleidoscope, and this glass was highly experimental when it was made. The windows are put together with the copper-foil technique, an innovation of the great Louis Comfort Tiffany. They are lighted by artificial light from behind and they glow day and night with the soft rich colors of Tiffany Favrite glass, thereby giving the room a look not found in many public buildings today. It really is, in many ways, like another world.

These windows were not signed but they have many of the marks of the work of Louis Comfort Tiffany. If they were not made by his studios, they were made by others working in his style and the glass is fine Tiffany glass.

The long corridor leading from the lobby to the offices and classrooms is lighted like a gallery. Some of the extensive collection of prints belonging to the College hang along its walls. All of the floors, with the exception of the lobby are carpeted, and the colors throughout the building are related to the greens and yellows in the stained glass windows. The building does have a quality of rare beauty.

Much of the beauty in Crummer Hall is, of course, due to the architect, James Gamble Rogers II. The windows are part of my own collection, but I have them only because I was told about them by Mrs. W. D. McCreery and Mrs. Grace Philips Johnson, two good friends of Rollins College who have lived in New Castle and were kind enough to tell me of these important windows which were threatened with destruction by the wrecking company demolishing the mansion in which they were located.

Many of the features, including the carpeting, and handsome wall covering, were suggested to me by John F. Ditzell who has given me invaluable help and advice in planning Rollins' new buildings.

Why is Rollins not following the trend and building purely institutional structures?

There is a question of taste involved. To change styles radically on Rollins' small campus would neither be incorrect nor a major mistake. Many colleges and universities build new buildings in the current style. However, we have elected to continue a style selected by a great president of Rollins College and I am convinced that the campus, when finished, will be one of exceptional taste and charm.

Why stained glass windows, antique furniture, prints by the masters, and oriental rugs in a business school?

The contemporary executive must know how to think in terms of computers. He must know economics and business practices. But he must also know the power of visual communications. The day when it was good business to contaminate the environment and embellish the landscape with eyesores is gone. So is the day when the manner in which a product looks is unimportant. In today's business world the well trained executive knows the power of visual symbols, he knows taste, he knows the importance of an appropriate appearance for an office, a factory, or a product.

Students learn some things in classrooms. They learn some things by serving internships with industries. And they also learn some things, and these are equally important, from the environment in which they live and learn. The "other world" atmosphere of Crummer Hall will do more than satisfy the yearning all men have for beauty. It will show many future business executives the power of good taste, and it will show them, also, how powerfully one can speak in visual symbols.

ABOUT THE COVER

The stained glass window on the cover is from a mansion which was being demolished in New Castle, Pennsylvania. It was the residence of the first president of U.S. Steel. It was brought to the attention of President McKean by Mrs. W. D. McCreery, mother of DAVID '50 and Mrs. PHILIP (JESSIE '45) REED, and by Mrs. G. P. Johnson, mother of THOMAS P. JOHNSON '34. President McKean bought the window and has lent it to the College for display in Crummer Hall.

206 students can hear a pin drop in acoustically perfect auditorium.

25,000 books in business library are all new.

Carpeted classrooms afford "quiet learning."

CRUMMER HALL

Rollins new $700,000.00 Crummer Hall was dedicated in November as a part of the college's 81st Anniversary Convocation. The Convocation address was delivered by Dr. Harrison Ray Anderson, a Presbyterian minister from Santa Barbara, California, and close friend of Roy E. Crummer.

The building was made possible by a $1 million gift from Mr. Crummer, which provided $700,000 for the building and equipment and $300,000 as endowment for maintenance of the building. The trustees of the College and other foundations guaranteed an additional $500,000 as endowment for library and faculty salaries.

The newest facilities for professional and teaching services are built into the structure, and include an audio-visual operation including motion picture projection, slide presentations and a sound system in the 206-seat auditorium.

Included in the building is a 25,000 volume business library, partly made possible by a $50,000 donation from the late A. G. Bush.

Other special features are indirect lighting in the basement rooms where no windows are available and a breakfront with Tiffany-like glass in a third floor office where a window couldn't be installed. A complete dictaphone system with outlets for each professor in his office is also a part of the new building. The completely air-conditioned structure has a faculty lounge and two classrooms equipped for motion picture production. There are 23 offices, 3 lecture halls and many smaller class and seminar rooms.

Crummer Hall houses the Roy E. Crummer School of Finance and Business Administration, including both the daytime Master of Business Administration and the evening Master of Commercial Science programs. In addition, various undergraduate business and economics courses and Freshman Foundation Humanities and Social Science courses are taught in the building.

An Alumnus Speaks

*...on what business
needs in its leaders of tomorrow*

Warren C. Hume is well qualified to speak on this subject. He has been with the IBM Corporation since he graduated from Rollins in 1939, steadily moving up to his present position as Vice President and Group Executive of the company.

Mr. Hume is a member of the College Board of Trustees and is married to the former Augusta Yust, also a 1939 graduate of Rollins College. They live in Chappaqua, New York. His observations about business needs in its leaders of tomorrow are very timely and lead into "Educating Tomorrow's Executive" by Dr. Charles Welsh on Page 8. Dr. Welsh tells how Rollins plans to fill present business needs and educate our business leaders of tomorrow in her new Crummer School of Business Administration.

The Business Leader of Tomorrow

By W. C. Hume

Vice President and Group Executive
IBM Corporation

The business world looks to graduate business schools to identify and begin the development of the next generation of business leaders. From this year's graduating class will come many of tomorrow's business leaders. Consequently, what business needs in the training of graduate business students is synonymous with what business needs in its leaders of tomorrow.

Tomorrow's business leader — even more than today's — must be a man of unusual competence, vision and character. He must be able to manage the challenges that the increasingly complex changes will bring about. Roger M. Blough of U.S. Steel stated the case well in a recent issue of the Harvard Business Review, "Only men with inventive minds, original ideas and unruffled patterns of thought can meet the challenge of change in the business establishment of today and the greatly multiplied challenges of change that are on the business horizon."

The business leader of tomorrow must be sufficiently knowledgeable and skillful to direct the operations of business in their most complex and rapidly paced form. He must be able to cope with the multiplication of goods and services, of tools and techniques, and of the complicated interrelationships that characterize the modern business economy.

The business leader must be sufficiently farsighted to anticipate change and the consequences of change. In modern corporate life, continuous change is the rule and not the exception. More and more, business leaders are expected to guide a company through the immense changes that occur when its product, or its organization, is no longer viable.

The business leader must be of sufficient integrity to maintain his obligation to the corporation, and to the many publics that it serves. In the long run, it is these publics that sustain and sanction the corporation and its leadership. Especially in the case of the multi-national business enterprise, it is important to have leadership with the honor and tact that are born of educated diplomacy.

Having described the leader of business that we need from the nation's graduate business schools, let's examine what elements in the business school are most likely to produce such a man.

The graduate business school should provide an opportunity for research and intensive study of the business process in such areas as organization theory and policy, management planning and control systems, understanding individual and group behavior, scientific decision making through the use of models, simulations and the latest computer techniques.

Specifically, the future businessman should be trained to have the capacity required to keep pace with change. He must have a basic background in:

1. The characteristics of decision making and administration of complex business organizations.
2. The analytical tools of modern business, including statistics, basic operations research and the information handling and control techniques of the computer era.
3. The techniques for understanding the wide range of environmental influences which affect business.

Conceptual knowledge and basic skills imparted by the business school must form the foundation upon which the individual can continue to build by study and experience throughout his business career.

The business curriculum can help to improve the student's vision if it provides him with a review of the history of business and gives him the necessary frames of reference to more fully understand and cope with the consequences of business actions taken today as they affect one's own business, business in general, and society's well-being tomorrow.

The knowledge and ability to articulate the business world's interests in society and government are essential. Gone forever are the days when business took no interest in the welfare of the general public. Instead, we now have — and have a need for more — leaders who are aware of the various publics to which business is responsible.

The modern corporation is responsible to: its employees, its stockholders, its customers, its competitors, the national government, state and local governments and communities. It is essential to effectively answer and balance the many obligations to all these publics.

The trend of events in our world — the speed of communications, the decrease in travel time, the interdependence of many of the nations of the world for their survival — makes it clear that in the future many companies will do business on a world market basis. The slogan phrased by Thomas J. Watson, Sr., "World Peace Through World Trade," may well be a working objective for young men who feel that their mission in life is to help improve conditions all over the world. Certainly, by developing their businesses and industries, and thus the material abundance of many of these nations, they will have a profound effect on the prospects for peace.

Throughout history, men have worked toward accomplishments beyond their personal interests. I believe tomorrow's business leader, by serving the interests of his company on a broader, global scale, will be in a unique position to bring that slogan into effect — for the well-being of all people.

Educating Tomorrow's Executive

By Dr. Charles Welsh
Dean of the Crummer School

The prosperity and survival of American enterprise and liberty depend in no small measure on how well financial and industrial management operate in the years ahead. In turn, this effective performance rests on the degree to which enterprisers and managers master the creative approach demanded by the world and the times. Rollins College, through the Roy E. Crummer School of Finance and Business Administration, has the opportunity to share in such dynamic development.

The country's economists look to colleges to provide graduates who are grounded in the great traditions of a society founded upon liberty and free enterprise. But these graduates must also be able to comprehend, to control, and to innovate in the complex environment of modern industry and finance without loss of the human touch. Ultimately the requirements of business and finance are the requirements of people.

The aims of education are not easily achieved today, unless it is recognized that particularly in business new conditions and constant change make the educational process a lifetime experience. The role of formal education is to equip the student to profit from experience, to recognize that business has become a demanding intellectual vocation.

Alfred P. Sloan of General Motors once said that the great need of industry is educated men. In his words "we can train men but we cannot educate them."

As a liberal arts college, Rollins is devoted to providing its students with traditional values derived from the humanities, the fine arts, the pure sciences, and philosophy. This qualifies them for responsible citizenship. It is the Rollins view that broad liberal arts education at the undergraduate level, followed by graduate business and management training of high quality, constitutes the ideal preparation for management creativity and business leadership.

The program of the Crummer School is a two-year course of study. The curriculum is designed to permit qualified Rollins College seniors to earn the degree of Bachelor of Arts at the end of their fourth year, and the Master of Business Administration degree at the end of the fifth year of college work.

The program of the Crummer School is based upon the concept that professional-level education for financiers and managers must build upon the foundations of liberal arts and traditional managerial skills the understanding required to cope with the demands of a new phase in the evolution of enterprise. To manage effectively in an era of dynamic technology, highly competitive corporate entities, and rapid social and economic change, the new generation of managers must have a forward outlook. They must possess accurate comprehension of the fundamental managerial uses of automation, data processing information systems, and financial strategy and planning. In addition, they must have a keen awareness of the human values served by business and industry, as well as the human values utilized in that service.

To achieve the optimum combination of work and study during the student's participation in the Crummer Program, each candidate for the Crummer degree must engage in an Internship in Business.

To insure the business administration student a realistic educational experience, the Crummer Program is therefore organized around certain dominant goals, using the most modern methods available. The goals and their means of realization include:

- (a) Emphasis upon the managerial use of data processing and automation techniques in modern corporate and industrial systems, and their impact upon business organizations and society.
- (b) Emphasis upon human behavior and values in business and economic affairs and the relations between the business organization, government, and society.
- (c) Emphasis upon individual ability to relate business experience and principles effectively in sound managerial judgments. The practice of decision-making in direct simulation of the business setting lends invaluable experience to the student of management and finance.

The faculty and administration of Rollins believe that the Crummer School, through its students, will contribute in the years ahead to the Central Florida business and financial scene and to the development of the American economy.

By Dr. Ward Woodbury
Director of Music

Music has long been a distinctive feature of Rollins College. My eminent predecessors and the distinguished artist faculty of the Conservatory of Music have brought national recognition to our school.

With the adoption of Rollins' new "Hour-Glass Curriculum" have come significant changes in the philosophy of music's place on the campus. In keeping with the prevalent views of music educators in liberal arts colleges across the nation the newly formed Department of Music replaces the Conservatory while retaining its best features. The unique ability of every member of our artist faculty to perform in solo appearances throughout the United States combined with their dedicated responsibility to teaching puts our department in an enviable position.

The musical innovations in the "Era of the New Curriculum" are threefold. First, the music major program culminating in the Bachelor of Arts degree has been updated and intensified with the offering of a two-year consolidated course in Literature and Materials of Music based on the Juilliard plan. In the junior year majors will enroll in History of Music while pursuing additional independent research in the literature of the music of their own instruments. The senior year finds the student in a two-term course in the comprehensive survey of music theory and history correlated with the field of applied concentration and meant to prepare him for graduate study in any of the fine conservatories or university music schools.

Plans are now being studied for strengthening the music concentration in the Master of Arts in Teaching program in order to prepare music majors for careers on the faculties of public schools and junior colleges.

Secondly, the new Humanities Foundation course brings to every student at Rollins an investigation of the 17th century Intellectual Revolution, and the response of music to this development is given comprehensive consideration. In addition, students wishing to probe aspects of music history will do independent research working directly with professors in the departments.

The non-music major may also elect such courses as Fundamentals of Music and Introduction to Music Literature. General college students with high degree of advancement in voice or an instrument may study privately with members of the major faculty or at the School of Creative Arts.

THE NEW LOOK

More specialized courses in history and theory for non-music majors are planned with the addition of new faculty.

Thirdly, students may participate more actively in musical organizations on the campus. The Chapel Choir remains one of the great traditions of the college singing the Sunday services in Knowles Memorial Chapel. In addition, however, a new secular glee club called the Rollins Chorale was formed at the opening of the winter term to supply a singing outlet for many students who could not be admitted to the Chapel Choir because of space limitations. It is intended that the Chorale will perform with members of the Florida Symphony Orchestra as well as representing the College on tours throughout the southeast.

The Rollins Singers, a group of 12 vocalists specially selected for their outstanding ability, made their debut in December on WDBO-TV, Orlando, and this was followed by several other performances prior to the Christmas vacation. The Singers are a highly mobile group whose beautiful girls are arrayed in attractive dresses while the men are sporting the latest in blue Tux jackets. They will sing music of the lighter side for campus functions, civic groups, and alumni organizations, and they already have numerous engagements planned for the spring term.

The new Baroque Ensemble affords talented instrumentalists the opportunity of performing music of the 17th and 18th centuries under faculty direction regardless of their declared majors. The organization will be a featured attraction at the 1967 Shakespeareana.

A college band will be formed in the fall so that the large numbers of students who have expressed a desire to have this experience in college may be accommodated.

The center of operations for the Music Department has shifted from Martin Hall on Genius Drive to the Chase Music Building on the campus. The building not only houses the office of the Director of Music, the department Secretary and her student assistants, but also contains a library of recordings greatly expanded from previous years and available to all college students in a listening room equipped with the latest Garrard turntables and earphones.

We hope the alumni will like our "new look" in Rollins' music program.

ENYART ALUMNI FIELDHOUSE...

Ground is scheduled to be broken for the new structure during Rollins Alumni Reunion Weekend, March 17-19, 1967. The much needed fieldhouse will enable the Tars to play their home games in their own gymnasium rather than, as they do now, play at a local junior college gym. Completion of the 37,900 square foot building will give the Rollins Tars a "Home Court" seating 2,500 spectators.

A tribute to the late Arthur D. Enyart, long-time Dean of Men and close friend and advisor to Rollins students, the Field House is an alumni project and is being financed by donations from Alumni, friends of the college, parents of Rollins students and a grant from the Federal Government. Sufficient funds have been raised from these sources to enable ground to be broken, however, further funds will be needed to see completion of the facility. An all-alumni solicitation is being planned by an able committee of Alumni and is projected for immediately after groundbreaking.

The late A. G. Bush, former member of the Board of Trustees of Rollins, donated $100,000.00 to the building fund.

The new physical education building will be composed of a ground floor and a second floor, or balcony. The main feature of the ground floor is the playing area. A moveable, accordion-like partition separates two full-size basketball courts, which are used as men's and women's physical education activity areas. When the bleachers are moved into place, the area is converted into a game court where the Tars will entertain visiting teams. In addition to the playing area, other facilities on the ground floor include men's and women's locker rooms, showers and restrooms, a varsity locker room complete with shower and rest room facilities, a clinic adjoining the men's locker room, storage rooms and two large faculty-conference rooms. The balcony floor consists of two large classrooms and four smaller rooms for conditioning, isometrics, weight-lifting and correctives. Because of the unique, reverse-fold bleacher seats, two additional areas, both 28' by 88', will be available as classrooms, meeting rooms or men's and women's physical education activity areas. These balcony seats are folded from top to bottom and form a wall when not in use, thus providing the additional space. All academic programs in physical education will be housed in the structure, as well as classes in other academic areas. In recent years, Rollins College has added strong emphasis to its programs in physical education. Every student is required to take two full years (six terms) of Physical Education courses. Because the College presently has no indoor facilities for any physical education programs, and these programs require large class areas, the physical education staff has faced increasing difficulties in carrying out its objectives. Under these conditions, a carefully planned and properly coordinated program has not been possible. Other college-related activities as convocations, commencements, academic conferences, concerts, Alumni events and community activities will also be held in the building.

The Enyart-Alumni Fieldhouse, consistent with the existing Mediterranean architectural tone on the Rollins campus, will be located northeast of Rex Beach Hall and the Kappa Alpha Fraternity House (see campus map on this page). John L. Watson, of Reynolds, Smith & Hills, is the architect for the building.

The addition of this new facility to the campus will enhance the College's position in intercollegiate athletics, allow for adequate expansion of intramural and academic programs in physical education, and contribute to the overall campus spirit and morale.

...GROUNDBREAKING PROMISED

Justice

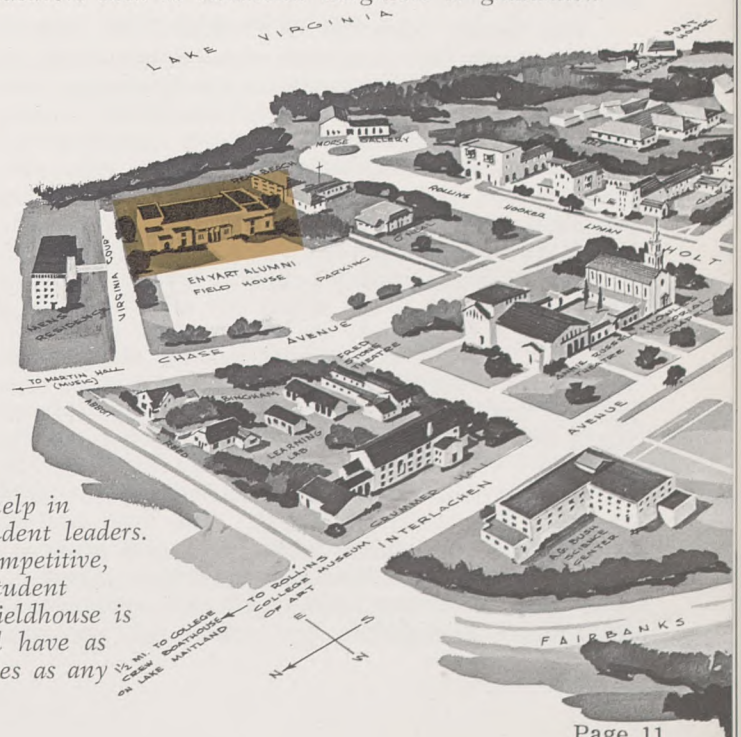

"The completion of the Enyart-Alumni Fieldhouse will mean the beginning of a new era insofar as the Physical Education and Athletic Department is concerned," says Director of Athletics, Joe Justice. "It will enable us to expand our program to meet the ever-growing needs of the students as well as the faculty. "To those of us interested in the intercollegiate athletic program, it should give new life to our basketball program. In this day of intense competition, it is almost impossible to compete without first-class facilities. In the Intramural level we will be able to add new activities and broaden those already a part of the program. In Physical Education there will be many possibilities for additions to the curriculum, and we can have indoor teaching stations that are often needed, in spite of our usually fine weather," adds Justice.

"Finally, this facility gives the college a meeting place large enough for the entire Rollins Family to let off steam in physical activity or gather together for the sedate academic endeavors such as Animated Magazine or graduation ceremonies."

Coffie

"The effect the Enyart-Alumni Fieldhouse will have on the basketball program at Rollins is immeasurable," states Rollins Basketball coach Boyd Coffie. "It will most certainly help in establishing a home court advantage over opponents, but most of all it will help in recruiting top athletes who are also student leaders. Because recruiting in basketball is so competitive, it is almost impossible to get the top student athlete without facilities. When the Fieldhouse is completed, we believe that Rollins will have as much to offer prospective student-athletes as any college in the nation."

Olsen

On June 8, 1966, the Rollins baseball and basketball teams traveled to Ecuador in South America on a goodwill tour. The invitation was issued to Rollins by the Ecuadorian Sports Federation and was co-sponsored by Dr. Carlos Recalde and Julio Moreirra.

The invitation to Rollins was a result of the fine record the baseball team achieved this past season. With a regular season record of 23-9, Rollins had already won its own Invitational Baseball Week, the Florida Intercollegiate Baseball crown, and was headed for Yankee Stadium where it would play in the NAIA Small College World Series.

The teams departed from Miami on June 8. After a rough flight because of hurricane Alma, we arrived in Bogota, Colombia for our first stop. Here we were greeted by the Colombian Sports Federation, and given a chance to see the rugged terrain of South America's Andes Mountains. After this brief layover, we boarded our plane once again, and our next stop was Quito, Ecuador. During this pause we first experienced the tremendous altitude of the Andes (elevation 9,000 feet). However, most of us soon forgot about the altitude since it was here in Quito that we had our first press conference. Finally, we were allowed to board again for our final stop in Guayaquil, Ecuador. We were greeted by the Ecuadorian Sports Federation officers and various other dignitaries. After another brief interview with the press, we were quickly ushered through customs and arrived at our living quarters, the Hotel Humboldt. The food was excellent and the rooms were large and air-conditioned. We had all the conveniences of home, including a swimming pool. This was undoubtedly Guayaquil's best hotel.

T A R S

By Charles (K) Olson

Later that day, we were taken on a sight-seeing tour of the city. Ecuador, as we soon found out, is very sports-minded. We visited a soccer stadium, and later that evening attended a game, which was witnessed by 50,000 spectators. We also viewed a basketball stadium with a seating capacity of 13,000. After this sports tour, we saw the other sights of Guayaquil and were very much impressed with its beauty and culture. Finally, we were set to play the first baseball game in a new 15,000-seat stadium.

The next evening, our basketball team presented an instructional clinic at the stadium. It was witnessed enthusiastically by 2,000 people. After the clinic, there were crowds of children asking for autographs. They were impressed with us because we were athletes, but more important we were Americans, or "Gringos". Most of these people are poor, and in some instances, the head of the family only makes $100 a year! Thus, we constantly saw children five and six years old selling newspapers and begging for money. It is sad to see such a sight, and yet there people were as warm and happy as anyone could possibly be. The expressions on their faces showed sincerity and acceptance, and yet deep down you felt a little sorry for them since they knew no other way of life.

This feeling of sorrow, however, did not change our mental attitude for the games we were to play. The basketball team did not do well because it was out of season for them. As a result, Rollins lost its games. The baseball team, on the other hand, did much better. Rollins ended up winning 3 out of 4 games from the Ecuadorian National All Star Team.

In the first games, we won by a score of 9-0. It was in this game that pitcher Gale Coleman became the "Sandy Koufax" of Ecuador, striking out 15 batters and allowing only 3 hits.

In the second game, we had to play 10 innings before we could beat the All Stars. Joe La Sorsa pitched a shutout and Bob Gustafson knocked in the winning run in the 2-0 victory.

Charles (K) Olsen, '66

In the final game, Rollins won by a score of 9-4. This victory the crowd actually enjoyed since they know baseball is an American sport, and expected us to win the series from the Ecuadorians.

After the party, we left the next morning for Miami. Most of us were weary and anxious to get home for the summer. And yet I know that each and everyone of us felt as though we had contributed something, not only to the Ecuadorians, but to ourselves as well. It is true that we went to Ecuador to play baseball and basketball. When we started out, we only wanted to win and show them how well we do play ball. But upon returning home it was different. Even though we had won most of our games, this somehow didn't seem important. We realized the importance of this trip was one of friendship and understanding. We realized that even though we live in the greatest country in the world, others take just as much pride in their countries. We realized that even though others live in different parts of the world, they are basically our friends. But most important of all, we realized how important a trip such as this one can be, not only for ourselves, but for our country and our college as well.

Baseball coaches whose institutions hold memberships in the American Association of College Baseball Coaches (composed of NCAA and NAIA universities and colleges) each year select two coaches, one representing the College Division and the other the University Division, as Coach of the Year.

The Tars registered Rollins best record since 1959 last spring, winning the Florida Intercollegiate Conference crown and its own annual Baseball Week Tournament. As a result of the successful season, the team earned trips to the NCAA's Atlantic Coast College Division Tournament in New York City and to Ecuador in South America, on a goodwill tour.

Granberry has now expanded the story into a novel, memorable and powerful in both its story line and its wild Florida background. As the Alumni Record goes to press, Trident Press advanced publication date to January 20. Dr. Granberry has held the chair of Creative Writing at Rollins College since 1933 and his many friends among the Alumni will be glad to hear of this important work, his first since 1932.

Walter M. Hundley New Rollins Alumni Director

The Alumni Association is happy to announce the appointment of Walter Moore Hundley to be our Director of Alumni Affairs. He will take over that position on February 15, 1967.

Walt spent the first twelve years of his business career in the sales field. However, in 1962 he became Director of Business Relations for the Better Business Bureau of St. Louis, Missouri, and in October, 1963 he was appointed Field Director of the Alumni Fund at Washington University in St. Louis. His organizational work with that Alumni Association has been most successful.

Walt is married and has three children. He is a Sigma Nu. His hobbies are officiating football, hunting and fishing.

We hope all Rollins alumni will help us to welcome Walt and his family as they become a part of our organization. Under his leadership we expect to set and reach new goals in alumni participation in the alumni program at Rollins.

—Bob Stonerock
President

The new Independent Men's Dormitory, built to accommodate seventy-eight men was opened in October. The building, costing $530,000.00 was arranged through the Community Facilities Administration, Washington, which granted Rollins a loan of $512,000.00 to underwrite the construction. The building conforms with the characteristic Mediterranean style of other buildings on the campus, has forty-six single rooms and sixteen double rooms which consist of a study and a bedroom each. The building is airconditioned, with a lounge on first floor and a basement consisting of a recreation room and laundry.

New High In Alumni Giving

Seventy-four members of the Rollins College Alumni Association became charter members of the Hamilton Holt Club in 1966. The Hamilton Holt Club, inaugurated in February, 1966, was designed an integral part of the Rollins Alumni Fund for those Alumni who make an annual gift of $100 or more to the Alumni Fund. Members received a specially engraved, framed picture of the Knowles Memorial Chapel and gardens.

The Directors of the Rollins College Alumni Association are especially pleased with this initial response to the Hamilton Holt Fund and are hopeful that this year's charter members will see fit to renew their membership next year and that many more Alumni will join in the program. The seventy-four members contributed $12,926.40 to this fund alone, bringing the total Rollins Alumni Fund contributions to a gratifying new high. The complete Alumni Honor Roll of donors and the total amount of contributions by Alumni, both in restricted and unrestricted giving, will be carried in the next issue of the Alumni Record.

One of the most enduring and rewarding traditions at Rollins is the endowment of a book, in perpetuity, in memory of each alumnus who has passed on.

Classmates and other friends, as well as the family concerned, are invited to send remembrances for any amount and thus participate in the BOOK-A-YEAR CLUB Memorial Program which provides for the Library an urgently needed book in the name of an alumnus.
